Gay Pride

June 7th & 8th "Do Ask, Do Tell" celebrate we Monterey's 3rd Annual Gay Pride March & Festival. It's free, it's fun, and it's the best opportunity of the year to see how

We're Here, We're Queer, and We Know How to Write Headlines

Publisher's Note

t's remarkable to think that our gay pride celebration is in its 3rd year. While that may not seem like much, consider that we are 30 years behind the rest of America in terms of organizing our community. At least we're out of the gate. I hope that you will join the rest of your gay sisters and brothers at one of the two pride events June 7th and 8th. I'm organizing the march, as I did last year, and Scott Steinman, who founded the pride celebration, is in charge of the festival. If you have questions about either, please see the information listed on page 10 of this issue.

A Status Report

Many people have commented on how much they enjoy having a newspaper of their own. If I can speak for the staff of The Paper, I would like for you to know that the pleasure is ours. There is nothing quite as rewarding as volunteer work, especially for a cause that you truly believe in.

As with all things, The Paper must evolve or die. We added a website to our list of services last year, and over 27,000 people have paid us a visit, far more than ever see the tree-based version you're reading now.

Media Mongrel

The Paper's next project is a bit more involved, and may never get off the ground. Every month as I send in a check to pay off my student loan, I feel the need to take advantage of my film school training. If TCI's revised contract with the City of Monterey includes public access, by this time next year the peninsula will have its own monthly gay television show.

Craig Wenzl, a local gay man and a friend of mine, is planning on starting his own gay radio show, modeled after the one he produced in Little Rock. With this addition, Monterey will no longer be able to consider itself a lost world off the coast of the gay mainstream. Soon coming out will just be a matter of tuning in.

Now for a self-indulgence...

My sweetie and I passed the one year mark as boyfriends on April. That's quite an achievement considering that we're almost exactly alike in stature, personality, and job description (if you know me and my temperament, you know why I find this remarkable). Of course, we've had to overcome the problems common to all relationships, but we seemed to be weathering them. This issue is dedicated to the man I love. Kisses, Alan.

Response to Just Girlfriends

Dear Editor,

In the last issue of The Paper, Jessica Rae wrote an article which began by stating her belief that lesbians should not feel obligated to adopt the stereotypical dresscode of a man. Eight paragraphs later, it had become one of the longest personal ads I've ever read. According to the article, if you enjoy mainstream social outings and look, dress and act like a woman then write her immediately c/o The Paper. If your are bisexual forget it. If you fit the mold of the "helpless female princess", stay away.

Jessica, does it really matter for a social outing? If you have "adopted the physical semblance of a man," then know she has "no desire to sleep with or share in [your] subculture". Do you sleep with everyone you go "shopping" with? While the original intent of this article may have been something I would agree with, the negative categorizing and general bashing of the large number of lesbian women who don't fit Ms. Rae's idea of a good time is disturbing.

Having said all that, I want to applaud Jessica's efforts in publicly trying to establish a network of lesbians for social gatherings, albeit exclusionary. For those of us who have lived in Monterey a short time, it appears the lesbian community is so far "underground" it might as well not exist. I grew up in the south where being discrete and inconspicuous was a way of life for gays. I often dreamed of living in a place where social consciousness was more enlightened. I assumed California was such a place but never considered the possibility that homophobia would be so strong within the gay community itself. As gays and lesbians we should overcome the temptation to discriminate as we have been discriminated against all our lives. We should celebrate our diversity, not exclude others from it. Besides, you just never know who you might meet if you allow yourself toexperience all the possibilities. It's a lot more than "admitting you like facials". It's about admitting you like yourself enough to be comfortable around someone else.

- Carol Reeb, Carmel, CA

Hey!

I wonder if you can keep your gayness to yourself. It is quite tiring hearing of your pride. Just remember, no matter what you do, no matter what you say, we will never believe you are born this way, God didn't create you that way, you chose to be ass pirates!

Love Always, Elvis, Ziek Heil!!

Support Needed for Gay Prom'97

straight prom when you are lesbian or gay can be torture. This only-in-California event has had extensive national press while providing an alternative to the zillions of traditional, heterosexual dances teenagers endure. Finally, a dance where you know it's safe to ask someone cute to dance.

Two adult chaperones will try to stay out of the way while making sure that everyone makes it home safely from this alcohol-free and drug-free dance. Both singles and couples are welcome. This dance is for lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans and friends 25 and under. If you even think this might be strictly confidential.

Gay Prom '97 is billed with the subtitle, Under the Stars We are Free, but the event is not free. GTA is looking for finan-

The Santa Barbara City Council unanimously adopted a Domestic Partnership Registry on Tuesday, 20, 1997.

Local AIDS Housing Organization Needs Loan Assistance

avid Wheeler of All American Loan Services in Monterey is seeking individuals interested in participating in a loan to the John the XXIII AIDS Ministry, a local AIDS service organization that operates two low-rent housing projects for HIV+

Wheeler was able to obtain institutional financing for the 1st Trust Deed on the Casa Max property in Seaside last year. There are three other loans on this property that total $75,000 and John XXIII is looking to refinance this amount.

Wheeler is seeking those willing to loan a minimum of $7,500 or up to the full amount. The loan will be secured by a 2nd Trust Deed on teh property at an interest rate of 10%. The loan will be interest only in monthly payment with a 5 year term, at the end of which the loan will be paid in full.

John XXIII has had a perfect payment record on this property since its purchase in 1993.

Wheeler describes this as a classic "win-win" opportunity. All American Loan Services will receive a nominal fee for this arrangement. You can contact Wheeler at (408) 655-8114.

Update on "Just Girlfriends"

by Jessica Rae Contributing Writer

verything is going well. I was happy to find that there are women out there who share the same interests and also felt alienated enough to make a change.

However, in response to some negative feedback about how some people think we at "Just Girlfriends" are being exclusionary, why would anyone want to spend time with people one had nothing in common with?

Think we're being too judgmental? I guess some people are not being judgmental when they accuse "Just Girlfriends" of being a vehicle to bedhop with our shopping companions.

Most of the women that have responded to my first article are in committed relationships. Both partners felt in some way out of synch with the local lesbian community.

Did you think my first column read like a personal ad? DUHHH-HHHH! Of course it was tailored to attract people with shared interests. "Just Girlfriends" is meant to be a way of starting new friendships based on shared interests. And if a sexual encounter ever evolves between two consenting adults, it will be between two consenting adults with shared interests and attractions

Think we don't like ourselves or have an identity problem? Wrong. We know who we are and what we like. Women. Women we have things in common with. Period. We are Lesbians/Gay Women, women who have tastes just like anyone else. It's not so difficult to understand. We're sorry it was a bitter pill for some. That was never our intention.

In closing, if you don't have common goals and interests with someone, why would one want to push the issue and spend time with them? Of course to have an answer for that one it would call for a multitude of therapy sessions.

On that note, thanks to all for the responses, both negative and positive. Have a great month!

Monterey Comes Out for "Ellen"

by Russ Duesenberg Contributing Writer

onterey's gay community watched in anticipation as Ellen Degeneres became the first star of a network TV show to announce that she was gay both on and off screen. Approximately 80 women and men gathered at the After Dark nightclub in Monterey to watch the history making episode. Reaction from the crowd was overwhelmingly positive.

"For me, it took more than an hour to realize and accept what I was, more like an hour and five years."

While the comedic aspects of the show were appreciated and spurred a rise in toaster jokes, some lesbians and gay men sympathized with Ellen's character's difficulty admitting her own homosexuality, and cited it as the most realistic part of the program.

Because of the format of the sitcom, events that normally take years were compressed into a one-hour episode. "For me, it took more than an hour to realize and accept what I was," said Carol Reeb, "more like an hour and five years. Coming out to my straight friends and family was much more traumatic. Very few were as accepting at first as those on the show."

Although high ratings followed "Ellen" through the subsequent episode in which she came out to her parents and the show has been renewed for next year, many gays are wondering what the repercussions will be from having an out gay character on national TV. "It's hard to really know what the fallout will be when public opinion is so easily swayed by the media, "said Reeb. "It's usually been my experience that once people get to know you and like you, it doesn't really matter so much whether you are gay or straight. I believe the straight community would be more accepting of gays and lesbians if they were portrayed as successful, contributing members of society by the media. I think the burden is on the gay community to insist it be recognized in that light.

Now that Ellen Degeneres has come out to her television friends, her television parents, television boss, and the entire millions of Americans curious enough to tune in to her past few shows, members of the gay community are calling for widespread support of the sponsors who have chosen to continue or begin buying airtime.

Women/Sport Premiere Issue Illustrates Homophobia

In the spring 1997 issue of Women | Sport , Sports Illustrated's long-awaited woman athlete-oriented magazine, Olympic softball team member Dot Richardson describes her years of hurt and disappointment, caused by people's presumptions that as an athletic woman she must be a lesbian. As early as seventh grade, Richardson felt "crushed" when a friend called her a lesbian during an argument, "freaked" when a teammate came out to her in 10th grade, and later in college ran "sobbing" out of her room when another good friend who was gay asked Richardson to "consider her sexual views," which Richardson characterized as a sexual advance. Richardson states that the stereotyping of female athletes as lesbians "has been one of the biggest hindrances to the development of women in sports" because parents don't want "insinuations" so they keep their daughters off playing fields.

While Richardson claims to have moved beyond judging her lesbian teammate ("Wasn't she still a good ballplayer, a good teammate, a good person?"), her article stereotypes lesbians as women who "wanted to be [boys]," denies lesbian sexuality as "not really sex," and calls being labeled a lesbian "poison." Richardson maintains that it's the possibility of being called a lesbian that keeps gifted women athletes from developing, not her and society's homophobia and discomfort with women who happen to love other women and who challenge gender stereotypes.

Write Women | Sport and tell them that including an anti-lesbian article in their premier issue is a cowardly way of denying lesbians a level playing field in the arena of women's athletics. Congressmen Sign On Against Trans-Violence

[WASHINGTON, DC: May 13, 1997] IN A groundbreaking meeting today, representatives of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community met with an Assistant Attorney General and members of the Office of Policy Development of the US Department of Justice to discuss violence and biasrelated crimes against differently-gendered people.

The meeting had been requested by members of the Gender Public Advocacy Coalition (GenderPAC) in a letter sent to Janet Reno following the bombing of the Otherside bar in Atlanta. Although the bombing was considered a "gay and lesbian" hate crime, the Otherside was also well-known by local citizens for its bisexual and transgender clientele.

GenderPAC's Dana Priesing, Tonye Barreto-Neto and Riki Anne Wilchins were joined by the Human Rights Campaign's Kris Pratt, Bi-Net's Lorraine Hutchins, and NGLTF's Helen Gonzales. Declared Ms. Gonzales, "As far as we know, this is the first meeting of its kind, and a crucial step for all of us in helping those on the Hill — and in the administration — recognize the importance of crimes against the differently-gendered.

What Was the Leopold and Loeb Case?

By David Bianco
Contributing Writer

efore the O.J. brouhaha, before the Manson murders, even before the Lindbergh baby kidnapping, America's first "Crime of the Century" involved two amoral male lovers intent on experiencing murder. The crime, trial, and punishment of Leopold and Loeb - not to mention numerous literary and cinematic retellings of their deeds - have buttressed the link between homosexuality, criminality, and mental illness for generations of Americans. Long before the gay and lesbian community had organized itself in a manner that could respond to negative press, Leopold and Loeb were demonized in newspapers, books, and even by their own attorney as very sick individuals whose homosexuality was directly linked to their criminality.

Nathan F. Leopold and Richard A. Loeb were two wealthy Jewish teenagers of exceptional intelligence. Lovers since their early teens, they spent a tremendous amount of time together, often bird-watching or driving around their native Chicago. While Leopold had a very strong sex drive, Loeb was driven by lust of a different sort: he dreamed of committing a "perfect murder." Not out of hatred, or revenge, or greed—but out of sheer curiosity about what it feels like to end another life.

Leopold's eros and Loeb's thanatos came to a bizarre pact: they would have more sex and commit more crimes.

At first, the duo shoplifted, set off false alarms, vandalized property, and torched buildings. But Loeb was not satisfied, and the two decided the time was right to experience homicide. On May 21, 1924, Leopold and Loeb kidnapped 14-year-old Bobby Franks from his schoolyard. Once they had the boy in their rented car, Loeb struck his head four times with a chisel, and Franks bled to death. They drove to a deserted area, stripped the boy naked, poured acid on his face to conceal his identity, and shoved the corpse in a drainning.

When they returned home, they burned the boy's clothes, cleaned up the car, and called the boy's father to tell him about the kidnapping—and that a ransom note would follow. The note, which arrived the next day, demanded $10,000 in old, unmarked bills. Since the murderers were already millionaires, the ransom was simply for show. But in any event, before the money could be paid, the body was found and identified. The boy's death caused a sensation in Chicago, and a massive investigation began, with both professional and amateur criminologists trying to solve the case. Among them was Loeb, who shared his private theories with the police. He didn't help himself, however, when he told them, "If I were going to pick out a boy to kidnap or murder, that's just the kind of cocky little son-of-a-bitch I would pick."

Soon, a pair of glasses found at the site were traced to Leopold, and the typeface on the ransom letter matched other notes Loeb had written. The pair were taken in for questioning, and when confronted with the evidence each confessed but blamed the other. When reports of two wealthy young men who killed for sport hit the newspapers, Chicago residents demanded blood.

Fearful that his son would get the death penalty, Richard Leopold Sr. hired the nation's most prominent and talented defense attorney, Clarence Darrow, to take the case

Since Leopold and Loeb had already confessed, Darrow had his clients plead guilty, and focused his courtroom work on sparing their lives. Indeed, his speeches from the Leopold and Loeb trial are still considered the classic argument against the death penalty. He said he could think of something worse than a dead boy in a drain pipe: "I can think of taking two boys ... irresponsible, weak, diseased ... penning them in a cell, checking off the days, the hours and the minutes, until they be taken out and hanged."

Darrow did not call his clients insane, but insisted that they suffered from a host of mental illnesses that should persuade the court to be lenient. Among those mental illnesses was "sexual perversion." In other words, their homosexuality helped both explain and mitigate their crime. Darrow's eloquence triumphed once more, as Leopold and Loeb were sentenced to life plus 99 years in prison - no death penalty.

Because of their wealth, Leopold and Loeb had special privileges in the Northern Illinois Penitentiary at Statesville - including the right to visit each other often. Leopold became a model prisoner, but Loeb remained predatory, raping several of his fellow inmates. Loeb died at age 28 when a young prisoner he attacked fought back and killed Loeb with his own razor blade. Leopold volunteered for an Army malaria experiment, survived, and was paroled in 1958. He moved to Puerto Rico to work in a hospital, wrote a book about his experiences, married a woman in 1961 and died in 1971.

What Will You Wear at Gay Pride '97?

by Marsha Olson Contributing Writer

Tow! It's that time again! Yup! It's time for GAY PRIDE '97. This is an event that let's you celebrate your freedom, creativity, individuality and most of all who you are!

So the best way to celebrate is to dress up! That's right...the "F" word...er, uh...I mean "FASHION." There is no better time than to join in a parade to display your colors and "fashionableness" to the world. Throughout the years there has been everything from the outrageous to the naked participant. If you're planning on going out of town this year, like parading in S.F. or N.Y., expect to see lots and lots of exhibitionists: chests, breasts, bulges, etc. Plus you'll see some of the highlights like bondage gear, leather, feathers, rubber, freakish costumes, big wigs, platforms and the list goes on.

You'll also be doing a huge amount of walking. If you are planning on being in the sun, leave the polyester at home; whether it's a shirt, shorts or that dress you've been waiting to do drag in...Don't! You'll be sweaty, sticky and by the end of the day irritable. Your best bet will be breathable cottons and linens.

Here are a few tips whether you want to feel and look casual, glamorous or outrageous. And don't forget your feet! Most of your time will be spent on your precious feet so save them for the rest of your venturing and cruising with comfortable boots, walking shoes, or athletic ones! Have Fun!!!

Throughout the years there has been the outrageous to the naked participant.

Casual/Comfortable

Windbreaks • Pride wear • Walking shoes • Levi's • Tanktops • T-shirts • Haltertops • Shorts • Polos • Adidas • Fisherman's Hats • Baseball caps • Backpack • Sunglasses

Eyecatchers

Anything with a triangle/rainbow • Fur • Sequins • Bondage wear • Leather • Rubber • Vinyl • Wigs • Funky hats • Biggest platforms possible • Capes • Decorated umbrellas • Feather boas • Glitter make-up • Dog collars

"The Freak"

Garbage bags or garbage turned into apparel • Streakers • Dress you pet just like you! • Gay pride bumper sticker turned into breast plate • Goggles on and dressed as a gay space alien

If you are planning on being in the sun, leave the polyester at home; whether it's a shirt, shorts or that dress you've been waiting to do drag in...Don't!

Roseanne Finale Émbraces The Whole Conner Clan

s nine wonderful years of ABC's hit show, Roseanne, come to a close with the May 21 finale, the lesbian, gay and bisexual characters have a central place in the extended Conner family as they welcome home Darlene and David's baby from the hospital.

Roseanne has introduced five lesbian, gay and bisexual characters over the years, and has addressed issues from coming out to older lesbian identity, and from lesbian and gay families to workplace discrimination.

In 1994, Roseanne made television history with an onscreen kiss with Mariel Hemmingway, helping pave the way for realistic and open portrayals of same-sex intimacy on television. The show on the whole has been a central driving force in opening Hollywood's-and America's-eyes about the importance of fair, accurate and inclusive media representation of lesbians, gay men and bisexuals.

Please thank Roseanne and ABC for producing such a high-quality, intelligent and inclusive program as Roseanne, and let them know that the Conners-and the entire extended family-will be sorely missed.

Babylon 5 Says Same-Sex Marriage Is Not Just For Martians

The April 24 episode of the science-fiction series Babylon 5, two male crew members are sent on an undercover mission to Mars as a gay newlyweds in order to infiltrate the society there. As they were given their falsified identification, their contact, Captain Jack (Donovan Scott) told them that "most of the resistance travel light, travel alone. So to get travel permits for the two of you together...you're [going to pretend to be] a young, married couple on holiday to Mars for their honeymoon."

The two characters, Dr. Stephen Franklin (Richard Biggs) and Marcus Cole (Jason Carter) assumed the roles with total nonchalance with Marcus saying to Stephen, "Well, shall we go, darling?" They argued about in-laws and other day-to-day issues and showed casual affection for one another, down-playing the fact that this was a gay couple and choosing instead to deal with the characters as just another married couple. At the episode's conclusion, Franklin and Cole were still in the Martian rebel camp, and their cover had not yet been exposed, as they were placed in the "Honeymoon Suite" of the local hotel.

Babylon 5, by introducing the issue of same-sex marriage so casually, sends a message to its audience that same-sex marriage need not be such a big issue. They also present a more accepting and inclusive society in the future, as opposed to shows such as Star Trek: Deep Space Nine.

Please thank the WB for Babylon 5's candid portrayal, and encourage them to continue to fold lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender elements into their plots.

A Little Social Club Grows Up...

by Jonathan Martins Contributing Writer

he Grande Cypress Empire of Monterey (GCEM) was first established as the local chapter of a gay social club in 1971. In the beginning the GCEM was one of a handful of chapters throughout the state; since then the International Alliance of Courts has established 62 courts around the globe. Over the years the court system has evolved into various volunteer organizations whose main purpose is to support their communities.

Court Functions

As with the other courts the GCEM has grown from a social club into a nonprofit organization. With each reign we continue to grow and evolve-we're not just a bunch of drag queens anymore!

This year the GCEM is embarking on a new era: an era of more focus on fund raising. On August 9th

Over the years the court system has evolved into various volunteerorganizations whose main purpose is to support their communities.

the GCEM will present their most ambitious event to date: Seasons of Love: An Evening of Caring and Sharing. The evening will feature a catered dinner with a proposed choice of either Filet Mignon, Filet Mignon with Jumbo Prawns, Stuffed Game Hen, or a Veggie Plate. A silent auction and a variety show will round out the evening, with the beneficiaries of the evening being the Monterey County AIDS Project, The Santa Cruz AIDS Project, and John XXIII AIDS Ministry. As a member of the Board of Directors, Artistic Director Michael Pina will produce this event, as well as other theatrical events in the coming months.

The Big Event

Seasons of Love is meant to celebrate life, as well as the lives of those who have moved on. The program will share some glimpses of the lives of loved ones.

Anyone wanting to submit a picture and/or a story about a loved one can contact the GCEM at the phone numbers below. A donation is requested to help cover the cost of the program.

Tickets for the event are limited, so please purchase them in advance; prices are $100 per person, $175 per couple. You can show your caring (sharing?) side by becoming an underwriter in one of the following categories: "Executive Producer, $2500 and over; Associate Producer, $2000 -2499; Benefactor, $1500-1999; Patron, $1000-1499; or Underwriter, $500-999. Volunteers are also needed to help with graphic design, publicity, fund raising, backstage details, set design, and the silent auction. For more information or to volunteer, please contact Michael Pina at (408) 394-6846, or Jonathan Martins, President of the Board of Directors, at (408)633-6481.

We're Going to the Mall: A friendly easterner in front of our favorite dome. Entrance to the Capitol is free as are all of the monuments and museums along the mall, but be prepared for the thirty minute wait to go through the metal

Mr. & Mr. Smith Go to Washington

by Tracy Nyle Contributing Writer

ay is the month to visit the sparkling marble monuments of the Capitol. The city is blooming, the weather hasn't turned sticky hot, and the crowds are manageable.

My traveling companion and I stayed at the Radisson on Dupont Circle in a huge top floor room with a panaramic view of neighborhood. Dupont Circle looks like most other parts of the Washington; tidy brownstones, small restaurants and cafes; and a variety of shops. There aren't a great number of visible gay folk, although a few rainbow flags show up in the occasional shop window.

From the hotel, it's an easy walk to the Metro station. Washington's clean if stark subway system is the easiest way to travel around the city, although it stops running before the bars close, so plan accordingly.

Tourist Attractions

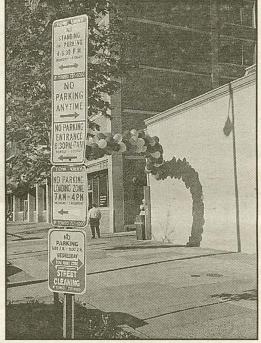

We started our travels with lunch at the newly restored Union Station. It's a handsome structure with an enormous coffered ceiling that has become part transportation hub, part shopping mall.

From there, we continued to our tour of the Capital Mall. The Capital is easy to find, as most of the streets radiate from the imposing structure. The wait to pass through the airport-style metal detector to enter took about 30 minutes, but it was fascinating walking the halls, seeing the House and Senate chambers, and the enormous rotunda.

I recommend a stop at the Smithsonian's Air and Space Museum, with famous aircraft (the genuine article, not replicas) hang from the glass and steel ceiling. The hands-on exhitbits leave something to be desired, but the spectacle of full-size air and spacecraft is breathtaking.

My companion and I also stopped at the National Holocaust Memorial. Visitors walk through a self-guided chronologically structured journey through the Holocaust, from the Nazi uprising through to the liberation of the concentration camps. We spent some time in the research center looking for information on lesbians and gays sent tothe camps. The information was there, although it's limited to a few stories of male entertainers and hustler, and one lesbian. A pink triangle from a prisoner's uniform is on display, as are several photos of those imprisoned.

Street parking can hit a San Francisco level of complexity around Dupont Circle.

Nightlife

Washington isn't San Francisco. In fact, it's barely Columbus. Apart from the availability of naked go-go boys—which we didn't have time or the desire to see—the club scene is on a par with San Jose. There are a handful of clubs around Dupont, each catering to a particular audience: college boys, yuppies, Latinos, leathermen and transvestites (an interesting mix at Mr. P's), and a medium-sized dance bar.

For a very gay and social dinner, there is Annie's near Dupont Circle, where meat is king. The more restful Two Quail Restaurant (320 Massachusetts Ave., N.E., (202) 543-8030) has homey food and a questionable sense of decor.

Take in "Shear Madness" at the architecturally fascistic Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts [Editor's Note: "Shear Madness" is also playing in San Francisco]. It's campy and partly improvised, but the gay character is a queeny hairdresser. How daring.

Do not leave Washington without a nighttime visit to the Jefferson Memorial. Like most things in Washington, it is more inspiring than any photo could show. It's place along the Potomac, with the city lights glittering in the tidal basin makes for a romantic respite indeed.

Reviews of Cultural Elements

by John E. Brennan Contributing Writer

Film

Crash - Compulsive visionaries passionate about life and injury find satisfaction in "Crash", a refreshing film about men and women obsessed with the collision of sex and automobile injuries. Exploiting the tiny intersection between the danger in sex and the danger in automobile accidents and presenting a fictional world that's set in the real world, this Cronenburg-directed stylish adaptation of J.G. Ballard's novel drives head-on into our disorienting culture. Not for everyone. A great film.

Liar, Liar - It was OK, but barely worth the price of admission. The previews reveal the plot and about 80% of the good jokes. Rent it for mild entertainment

The Lost World - How can he review it if it's not even released! Please. I can't imagine it's nothing but good entertainment. Plus it has Julianne Moore. Opens Memorial Day weekend.

Volcano - A volcano erupts in the mid-Wilshire, and Tommy Lee Jones tries to stop it while still being a good father. We get a few exciting city blocks of lava (that alternately moves fast or slow, depending on what the scene demands) and some dull METRO subway subplots. "Volcano" leaves the impression that volcanic activity is just another urban problem to be mastered by humans. Wins the award for best Heironymus Bosch joke in a drama. Rumor has it that the leading lady is Ellen DeGeneres' lady-friend...

Breakdown - Sort of "The Vanishing" meets "Deliverance." Thrilling and action-filled with not much plot to get in the way. Should have had an extra, I-thought-it-was-over, but-now-I-see-it's-far-from-over, scene.

Rent

Juliet of the Spirits (Giulietta degli Spiriti) (1965): A Fellini visual masterpiece with a rambling plot through a boorish housewife's mind and life. Notable parties. Yes, it has subtitles.

Dogfight (1991): Cruelty backfires on one of three Vietnam-bound soldiers trying to have fun in 1963 San Francisco before shipping out. Strong script with admirable acting from Lili Taylor and River Phoenix.

Taxi Driver (1976): Lots of Oscar nods for this De Nero vehicle. Jodi Foster was turning heads back then too. Worth seeing, or seeing again.

CD

POP/U2 (1997): It's amazing that a band this old can keep on changing. I like it. Tragic Kingdom/No Doubt (1995): I know, get with the times. Sheesh! Good stuff. Gwen Stefani is talented. Makes you want to be a teenager again.

Everything but the Girl vs. Drum 'n' Base/Everything but the Girl (1997): Extensive remixes of their newest songs.

bright moon shone on the tree filled with shiny-eyed creatures. Leaves shivered silver and black as long branches swayed under animal movements. A makeshift treehouse balanced there between the limbs, a gathering place where boys and girls conducted their rites of passage.

"Girls get to spin first!" Naomi, in body and spirit, was the most adult of the bunch. She seemed created for productivity: her curves full and round, her demeanor direct and efficient. The boys knew lust for Naomi, but also a particular intimidation all too familiar to their pubescence. The girls felt infatuation for the woman-child. They wanted to be like her... strong, confident, pursued. On this night of initiation, Naomi controlled the game. "Girls first. Daphne: spin!"

Daphne - spindly-limbed, top teeth outto-there - wore thick-lensed spectacles on her tiny face. Daphne was the butt of jokes at school. They called her Daffy Daphne (as she was prone to spells of forgetfulness bordering on amnesia); Goober Girl (also afflicted by allergies and chronic post-nasal drip); and Godzilla Breath (her sinuses, coupled with the inability to completely close her mouth, created halitosis of monster proportions).

It was Daphne's turn to spin the bottle. The boys on the opposite side of Daphne all prayed silently, please don't let it be me, please don't let it be me, please don't let it be me.

A few kisses passed around the tree-house, dry and sterile. With anticipation bordering on dread, each boy held his breath as the girls spun the needle of his fate. Finally, the bottle came to Naomi. The boys prayed silently, let it be me! let it be me! let it be me! let it be me! And one girl - the girl with the brown eyes - wished that it could be

Eyes wide open, she leaned forward. Naomi put her lips on the quivering mouth before her. Barely, just barely.

In a circle they sat: three boys opposite four girls. From twelve o'clock: Naomi, Daphne, a girl with braided ponytails, then the girl with wooly black hair and brown eyes. Next: John with acute acne, Tommy with mild acne, and finally, the boy with a nervous twitch in his left eye. All the boys prayed silently for a kiss from Naomi. Two of the girls prayed silently for a kiss from Donny, who was not in the treehouse. Donny - a boy so cool and confident that he had no need of tree-house games of spin the bottle.

her lips meeting Naomi's.

"Now who is it gonna be...?" Naomi teased, looking at the half-circle of boys, then into the brown eyes of the girl directly across from her. "You never know...!" She turned the bottle this way and that, pointing at the three boys, then at the brown-eyed girl, then spun the bottle. It turned fast and smooth for what seemed like hours to the mesmerized children, then slowed, eventually wobbling with a clackety-clack until it came to rest directly facing the brown-eyed girl.

"Oh man! You gotta spin it again!"
Tommy whined.

"Yeah, that doesn't count...!"

"C'mon Naomi!"

"Well.. the rules are the rules...," she teased, looking into the brown eyes. "The rules are: you have to kiss whoever the bottle points to."

"Gross!"

"You're not going to kiss a girl are you?"

"Eeeew!"

"Let's get out of here!"

And the five children scrambled out of the treehouse.

Long moments passed. The tree vibrated with life: sap running through trunk and limbs; moisture wicking it's way to silvery leaves from roots reaching deep into the earth; and two heartbeats pulsing, beating, shaking the entire tree.

Naomi put her face near the brown-eyed girl. The girl could smell the sweetness of Naomi's hair and clothes and her belly turned inside out. Eyes wide open, she leaned forward. Naomi put her lips on the quivering mouth before her. Barely, just barely.

"Yes... I... yes...," and the two fell together in a tangle of arms and legs and lips and heartbeats.

The moon rose higher and brighter against the dark sky and the leaves danced silver, black, silver, black as the two discovered peak and valley, palm and voice, quiver and bow.

To be young and gay to be young and gay it was all he'd known, unafraid to make excuses to say he had a girlfriend, to pray to God that he would change but it was God who made him this way so now he loves not changing and the rainstorms of people dropping drops of hatred will burn in hell for hating it is love not hatred that scores points for heaven and there are more ways of being who's to say their way is right? meanwhile they keep on making babies unplanned for and unapologetic procreation lives of children unloved, innocence in need of salvation and the angels laugh at the jokes for they know the truth to be young and gay, it is okay, it is just another way of being

Women On the Russian River

boasts a couple of

snazzy new bars

by Dan Presser Contributing Writer

he Russian River has long been a favorite gay male vacation spot, but things are different now. Women have made this resort area a assian haven as well. Summer seasons kicked off with Women's Weekend. Several thousand lesbians will descend on the area for three days of celebration, including parties, dances, comedy, golf and pool parties at several resorts.

New Places and New Faces

The River now boasts a couple of snazzy new bars where women gather. One is the Bull Pen, which is a sports bar and another is called River Business where Lalita's used to be. Both pubs will be hosting special welcome parties for women while Fife's Resort will be sponsoring contests galore. Among the favorites at Fife's are the "Sexiest Bikini Contest" and the "Martha Stewart Award for the Best Decorated Campsite."

Merri Cavanaugh, the handsome Harley riding former owner of the Cactus Club, is hosting the Best Butch in Boxers and other festivities at Molly Brown's Country Club. Summer at the River closes the way it comes in, with a bang. The end of the year blow out is always the last weekend in September.

One of the beautiful changes at the River is the increasing prominence of women owned and operated businesses. Local female movers and shakers include both town lawyers, the president and the executive director of the Chamber of Commerce. Women now own of several excellent restaurants, such as Northwood Roadhouse and Brew Moon Cafe, which incorporates the women owned Breeze Inn

Barbecue. Camille LeGrand, a pioneering feminist attorney in a previous incarnation owns the area's premiere vacation home rental business, Russian River Getaways. There are many other female owned retail businesses as well.

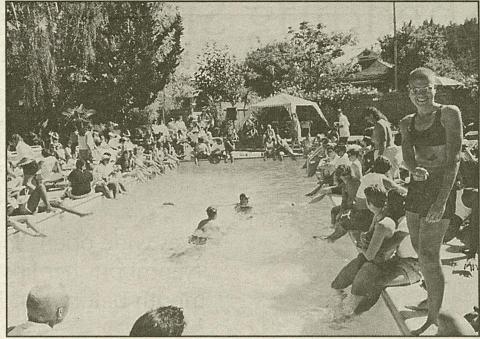

Seasonal Pleasures

The Russian River resort area has been a summer destination, but many are discovering the joys of autumn, winter and spring along its banks.

October is filled with fun events such as the Russian River Treasure Hunt, ArTrails and the Sonoma County Harvest Fair.

December's activities include the Russian Heritage Christmas Celebration and Crafts Fair.

In January visitors enjoy the Russian River Winter Wine Land weekend. Spring

along the Russian River is welcomed with the "Spring Thing," the "Rio Stomp and the Russian River Barrel Tasting. Complete details about all these events and more can be found by contacting the Russian River Chamber of Commerce.

Tourist beds along the Russian River have dwindled due to the sale of one of the major resorts and the closure of some smaller spots. Tourists are renting vacation homes to fill the bedroom gap. Beautiful homes, ranging in price from $125 to $290 per night, are an economical alternative for groups vacationing or retreating together. Many of these properties have private hot tubs, swimming pools. Many have river views and some have river access. All have full housekeeping, amenities and linen. At the lower end are lovely romantic cottages for two. There is also a listing which includes a corral for visiting equine fillies.

Good, Clean Homos

Pop Homo Band Erasure Doesn't Disappoint

Erasure is about

as close as a gay group can get to

The Carpenters.

by Waylon Katz Contributing Writer

op band Erasure is not for everyone.

After ten minutes at the concert, my companion leaned over to me and moaned "It's just like going to church. Zero angst." He was disappointed by the lack of a mosh pit.

Expecting to see a mosh pit at an Erasure concert is like expecting to meet a husband at Blow Buddies. You simply don't go to see an Erasure concert to wallow in your problems. Erasure is about as close as a gay group can get to The Carpenters. Happiness, love, and more happiness are their only themes.

I Wanna Be A Cowboy

Erasure's concert tour coincides with the release of their new album "Cowboy". The odd thing about an Erasure concert—like those of the Pet Shop Boys and other synth bands—is that there are no musicians on the Western-themed stage set; only bare-chested blond Andy Bell, a handful of back-up singers, a guitar playing cactus (the other half of Erasure Vince Clarke), and a tower of blinking computer hardware.

Programmed to Please

Cute as a bug and mighty gay lead singer Andy Bell hopped and spun through Erasure's hit list, which includes homo favorites "Oh L'amour", "Blue Savannah", and "A Little Respect" (the latter being this writer's favorite).

Bell is an engaging enough front man, and his vocals were polished enough to make the two of us wonder if he wasn't lip-synching (he wasn't). Since each song is programmed, there's no room for improvisation, but this wasn't the crowd to demand it. If you want an evening of good, clean entertainment with some of your homo sisters and brothers, this is your ticket.

Licensed to Kill: Documentary Focuses on Murderers of Gays

by Marsha Tacks Contributing Writer

he best documentary filmmakers know their subjects inside and out. Arthur Dong, whose new documentary Licensed to Kill won the Filmmaker's Trophy at Sundance, was himself a victim of a gay bashing in San Francisco that could easily have turned deadly.

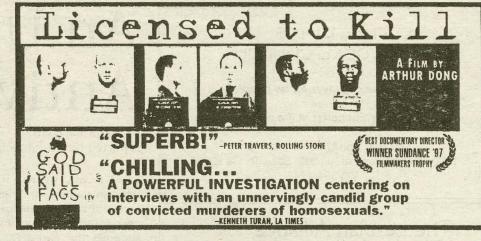

Licensed to Kill is simple in form. Interviews with with six men convicted of killing gay men are interspersed with intertitles of quotes and sound bites from Pat Robertson, Ralph Reed, and other rightwing leaders, and sickeningly gory crime scene photos.

What's unusual about Dong's approach is that unlike his PBS counterparts he chooses not to manipulate his audience through reenactment nor film technique; they are instead left to meet these admitted murderers, some of whom are themselves gay, and by seeing beyond their recollections of their crimes decide for themselves what drove them to commit seemingly senseless these crimes.

Perhaps the most unsettling of the killers is a well-spoken, seemingly intelligent gay men who methodically recounts his motives through an uneasy smile. Jay Johnson, who killed two men in Minneapolis in two separate shootings, speaks of his internalized homophobia, of his ultra-conservative religious upbringing, and his entry into a racist gay community.

For the others, their motives range from simple robbery to a display of teenage bravado to a religious crusade. All found their victims at well-known gay cruising areas ("because they're easy to find" according to one killer) and the type of gay men who frequent these areas won't report a lesser crime. In most cases, the victims willingly accompanied the killers to secluded locations or their homes where they were then murdered.

The single failing of Dong's otherwise insightful and well-crafted film is his reliance on sociatal pressure as a motivating force for murder. In all but one case, the reason appears to be mental illness or retardation. His humanistic approach to his subjects is laudable, considering his own harrowing experiences (the man that the gang did bash was almost beaten to death). Dong allows us to meet the men who hate homosexuals and wonder if, in another context, we would be so driven by our own homophobia or foolish as to become one of their victims.

he 13th Annual Gay Evening in May, the Santa Cruz talent show for the gay community received cheers from queers May 16th & 17th at the Santa Cruz Civic Auditorium. The Saturday performance began with a catered dinner for over 250 supporters who were inexplicably forced to listen to a duo sing ABBA hits while eating. After the last refrains of "Dancing Queen" came to a thankful end, the rest of the enthusiastic audience filled the auditorium. Attendance appeared equal to that of last year's event

Every year AGEM showcases the best in gay talent from the Central Coast. Stand-out performances included "Poverty Paradise", a dance routine performed by Dee Meredith and her extraordinary troupe of hip hop dancers. Local singing duo The Queerberries offered a lesbian-themed acoustic performance, and favorite Karen Soo Hoo's solo performance had the audience stomping the Civic's parquet floor.

Other favorites that night included The Jus Country Cloggers, Tish Denevan's sing-along "The Chapel of Love", and Sini Man's a capella performance of "This Song (Ode to John)", written in memory of his brother.

Less successful that night were a barely comprehensible camp drag routine based on Mommie Dearest, and an engaging but clumsy juggler.

A Gay Evening in May donates the proceeds from the event, generally in the neighborhood of $25,000, to several local community groups including the Santa Cruz AIDS Project, WomenCARE, and the Santa Cruz Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgendered Community Center

An Update On Antiviral Resistance

Early studies of the newest protease

inhibitor, Agouron's nelfinavir, suggest that if you become resistant to it, you may still be sensitive to the other

currently available

protease inhibitors

by Mark Katz, MD reported by Jim Stoecker

Last month, we reviewed the current thinking on when to start antiviral therapy, what antivirals to start with and when to change your antiviral regimen. Left open was the question of why antiviral regimens fail to suppress the virus. The most likely cause is the development of viruses that are resistant to the drug or drugs being used. In fact, we suspect the development of resistance whenever an antiviral regimen results in incomplete suppression of hiv.

Two Types of Resistance

Scientists talk about two types of antiviral resistance.

Phenotypic resistance refers to the decreased susceptibility of hiv to the drug being used. This is the practical definition of resistance, what most of us mean when we talk about antiviral resistance. The drugs aren't working because most likely the virus has mutated in such a way that the drug no longer is fully effective.

Genotypic resistance refers to those mutations which are associated with the emergence of phenotypic resistance. This is the actual specific genetic mutation of the virus and is of interest to scientists and researchers.

Today we have sophisticated testing mechanisms that can type the particular hiv that infects an individual. This testing can determine whether genotypic resistance is present, whether specific mutations of the virus exist in the blood. No test, however, will tell whether resistance is actually occurring.

With a viral typing test, we may know that an individual is at risk for developing resistance to certain antivirals, but the actual emergence of resistance must be inferred from viral load testing and the monitoring of the individual's overall health.

Reverse Transcriptase Inhibitors

The reverse transcriptase inhibitors have differing resistance patterns. AZT resistance emerges gradually because a combination of several viral mutations are required for high level resistance. The risk of developing AZT resistance increases with time on the drug. Time allows the virus to form the specific set of mutations required.

On the other hand, both 3TC and nevirapine have a single point mutation that confers high level resistance to the drug. This means only one viral mutation is required to highly reduce the effectiveness of these drugs. In fact, early testing of nevirapine revealed the rapid development of resistance when the drug was used alone.

Nevirapine is now used only in combination with other antivirals. Some researchers are suggesting that the use of both 3TC and nevirapine be avoided when > prescribing a first-time antiviral combination. They reason that since these drugs require only one mutation to render them ineffective, their use should be confined to later combinations.

> Such an approach, however, is not part of the current standard of care. The "d" drugs (ddI, ddC and d4T) all have low levels of phenotypic resistance. This means that should genotypic resistance occur, these drugs are not rendered totally ineffective. Even if the required viral mutation occurs, these drugs retain some efficacy. Because of this, certain researchers would recommend that these be the drugs for an intial antiviral regimen.

Protease Inhibitors

Early studies on protease inhibitors highlighted the importance of dosage level and regimen compliance in the development of resistance to these antivirals. For example, early studies of saquinavir showed less viral mutations when 7200 mg per day were used versus 3600 mg per day. Equally important is staying with the recommended dosing schedule, which ensures that adequate levels of drug are present in the bloodstream, thereby lessening the development of viral mutations.

With protease inhibitors, we have the additional issue of cross resistance. If you develop resistance to one protease inhibitor, are you then resistant to the others? This appears to be the case with saquinavir, indinavir and ritonavir. However, early studies of the newest protease inhibitor, Agouron's nelfinavir, suggest that if you become resistant to it, you may still be sensitive to the other currently-available protease inhibitors.

Strategies for Avoiding Antiviral Resistance

We know that resistance is more likely to occur if there is incomplete suppression of the virus. In such a case, the virus continues to reproduce and mutate. The specific mutations required for resistance can begin to emerge.

Thus, the best way to avoid the emergence of resistance is to go for complete suppression of the virus. (As we mentioned last month, this is in fact the goal of any antiviral regimen.) This means that you determine the most powerful combination of drugs available, that you take the highest recommended dosage, and that you follow the dosing schedule accurately and completely. If resistance should emerge, you then determine a new regimen to suppress the virus. The good news today is that we have a number of antivirals available to develop the best possible regimen for each individual.

Positive Lesbians Deserve the Best!

Achieving Your Personal Best GYN Health

By Risa Denenberg FNP Lesbian AIDS Project at Gay Men's Health Crisis

irst, the bad news: Recognizing the symptoms of HIV infection in women's bodies was delayed for many years because research was based on the model of AIDS in men's bodies. Gynecological (gyn) manifestations of HIV such as abnormal Pap smears, irregular periods, vaginitis, and pelvic pain were ignored for the first decade of the epidemic.

Women Were Ignored

Early opportunities to study the natural history of HIV in women's bodies were lost due to this neglectful approach, and as a consequence, women's survival time from an AIDS diagnosis continues to be less than that for men. Even when women began to be recognized and counted, lesbians and women who partner with women continued to be ignored. Researchers and doctors who learned to ask about same-sex sexual behavior in men still have not learned to accept and inquire about women who have sex with women.

The exclusion of lesbian and bisexual women from HIV research, prevention, and education is particularly striking when compared to the breakthrough of sexual silence in the public health sector in regard to gay male sexuality.

While this breakthrough was compelled by the high seroprevalence in the gay male community, the increasing rate of HlV infection in women has not compelled the same attention. Until women's (straight, lesbian, and hi) sexuality becomes part of the public discussion on HlV prevention, early detection, and treatment, all women are being neglected.

Lesbians experience unique challenges in accessing the health care system. This is primarily because lesbians face invisibility, and may fear provider hostility and abuse when seeking health care services. These fears are not unwarranted. In fact, discrimination and provider hostility toward lesbians is well documented. This often serves to drive lesbians out of the health care system, or to hide our sexuality and lifestyle from medical providers.

So, What's a Girl to Do?

One important point to keep in mind is that we have already done a lot! Lesbians have been front line AIDS activists throughout the epidemic. Lesbians have taken the lead in creating programs that serve women with AIDS, and have created the vast majority of programs, literature, research, prevention efforts and curriculum that deal with lesbians and HIV/AIDS. Peer education programs, pamphlets, forums, outreach, and social activities have brought women who partner with women together to discuss how to cope with the epidemic in our community.

in this environment, women have used the "grapevine" to share ideas, exchange referrals to good medical providers, discuss alternative treatment strategies and home remedies, and share humor about the unique problems of HIV infection in women's bodies.

HIV Symptoms in Women

The following problems are associated with HIV infection: Abnormal Pap Smears: All women need to have regular gyn check ups, and this exam should include a Pap smear. The Pap smear is a screening test for cervical cancer, and the pre-cancer condition called dysplasia. Women with HIV are about ten times more likely than other women to have an abnormal Pap smear. This is human papillomaviris (HPV).

HPV is sexually transmitted, hangs around in the genital area for many years, may cause small growths called warts, but often causes no problems at all. For HIV+women, HPV is an opportunistic infection, causing growths throughout the genital tract (penis, vagina, anus, vulva, or cervix) which may become pre-cancerous growths.

Pre-cancer (dysplasia) is more common in women than in men. It can always be treated if it is detected early. Positive women should have a Pap smear taken every six months.

Vaginal Infections: Positive women have more ore yeast infections, including oral thrush and vaginal yeast. When not treated thoroughly, yeast infections are painful and serious.

Taking antibiotics (for bacterial infections like bronchitis, sinusitis, bladder infections, etc.) increases the likelihood of oral and vaginal yeast infections. Early detection and preventive treatment can keep these problems under control.

Pelvic Inflammatory Disease (PID): A pelvic infection. often starts as a sexually transmitted infection, but becomes PID if it is not treated promptly and thoroughly. One episode of PID makes other episodes more likely. Multiple episodes of PID usually lead too chronic pelvic pain. Again, the key is early detection, prompt and thorough treatment, and good pain management.

Irregular Periods: Women with HIV often report changes in their periods. Sometimes women notice moore intense premenstrual symptoms (PMS), heavier or lighter periods, or loss of periods for months at a time.

Positive women seem to leave early symptoms of menopause such as loss of sex drive and hot flashes. This complaint has been virtually ignored by doctors. Women need to make it quite clear that our hormonal status is part of our sense of well being. Changes in menstrual function should be evaluated and treated.

Pulling Together A Personal Program for GYN Health:

First, learn all that you possibly can about your female body. Go to forums, read pamphlets, ask questions. Get personal by keeping a health calendar and writing down the dates of your periods, any unusual symptoms pain, spotting, our moods. Notice your cycles to take best advantage of your "good days." Share your calendar with other positive women, and always rake it with you to your medical appointments.

Find a good primary care provider. A primary care provider is a medical professional who understands about HIV infection and treatments, can admit you to the hospital if you become ill, and doesn't ignore your gyn care. Gyn care is primary care. You shouldn't have to go to a specialist to get routine Pap smears, medication for menstrual cramps, evaluation of menstrual changes, or treatment for a vaginal our pelvic infection.

Be concerned if your provider never asks you questions about your periods and sex life. Any negative judgments expressed about your sexuality lifestyle, or other important issues should be a cause for dismissal.

A good clinician will ask about any history of sexual abuse and treat any disclosure with due respect and concern for your safety. A Pap smear or pelvic examination does not need to be painful. If you don't often have sexual penetrations, be sure to have the provider use the smallest possible speculum.

Whenever you see a specialist, be certain to get a written report sent to your primary care provider promptly. Bring a "consult form" from your provider for this purpose, or an envelope with your provider's address. Learn about the opportunities to enter research programs.

There are currently two large studies of HIV infection in women, both of which are gathering information about gyn health: HERS (HIV Epidemiology Research Study) and WIGS (Women's Interagency HIV Study). Read booklets that describe opportunities for entering research into new treatments four HIV and for opportunistic infectious. To date, fewer than 10% of participants in HIV clinical trials have been women—far too few to know if the research results are actually valid for women

t the same time as deaths from AIDS are increasing for women as they fall for men, women's infections are often missed as the disease follows a different course, according to a new research study.

Women's HIV infection often is missed because doctors aren't recognizing that vaginal infections, yeast infections of the mouth and throat and cervical cancer are part of the disease. A recent federal report noted that while the AIDS death rate in men dropped by 15% in the first six months of 1996, deaths in women increased by 3%.

A Chicago consortium has found illnesscausing cytomegalovirus active in blood and secretions well before women with HIV progress to AIDS. The research found cytomegalovirus was the root cause of vaginal infections in 41 percent of the women tested.

Also at the third National Conference on Women & HIV, a University of Southern California team announced that it had detected unusual types of breast cancer in young HIV-infected women, including rare metaplastic carcinoma.

While the rate of AIDS deaths in men declined 15% in the first six months of last year, the rate for women increased 3%, according to figures at the Federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

AIDS is the third-leading killer of American women ages 25-44 and the No. 1 killer of African-American women that age. Women constitute the fastest-growing segment of the U.S. population to become HIV-infected.

Gay Vets Meet with Pentagon as Military Explores Gay Rumors in Plane Crash

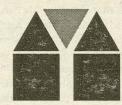

The Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Veterans of America (GLBVA) today held a first-ever meeting with Pentagon officials. On the agenda was the appointment of an independent review board to investigate abuses of "Don't Ask, Don't Tell, Don't Pursue." "No other gay veterans organization has ever Fone this," said Jim Darby, national president of GLBVA. Since May 2, rumors that the pilot whose A-10 crashed recently was gay fueled further criticism of the Pentagon's "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy. According to the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network, "We are concerned about any ongoing investigations under 'Don't Ask, Don't Tell, Don't Pursue' against additional servicemembers at Davis-Monthan or Laughlin Air Force Bases. We extend our deepest sympathies to the Button family over their loss." For more information contact Edward Clayton (GLBVA) at (205) 833-$391 and Kirk Childress (SLDN) at (202)

Corporations Continue to Affirm Domestic Partnership

As the deadline draws nearer for companies who do business with the City of San Francisco to commit to providing same-sex partner health benefits for all employees, two major corporations announced that they would comply and made statements supporting diversity in the workplace.

On April 24, Pacific Gas and Electric Company (PG&E) granted medical, dental and vision care to domestic partners of employees, which augmented previously existing benefits such as joint pension plans and bereavement leave.

Chevron Corporation announced April 30 that it will extend health, dental, bereavement and relocation benefits to both opposite- and same-sex domestic partners. "Addressing lesbian and gay issues makes excellent business sense," said Kirk Nass, chair of the Chevron Lesbian and Gay Employees Association (CLGEA). For more information contact Kirk Nass (CLGEA) at (510) 242-3932 and Mary Rodrigues (PG&E) at (415) 973-1007.

The Paper is a quaint but digitally savvy publica-tion. Layout is done in Quark Xpress on Wes' text from press releases, late night chats at the After Dark, matchbook covers, and drunken shouting matches is typed or OCR-ed via TextBridge and edited small but potent Power Macintosh. Non-digital Syquest cartridge for output direct to film at 1200 dpi. Printing is done by the handsome pressmen at The Herald. Monterey's Gay Homepage is updated bimonthly (more often since we're getting more hits) and uploaded to Monterey Bay Internet's server (we TechnoPurge MBAY!). The layout staff works to Smoothy, the floor of The Paper's smoke-filled office up the hill from the aquarium. Photos are scanned in via an Epson ES1000-C scanner prior to being unwrinkled in Photoshop. EPS images are created using Illustrator and Streamline. National news comes via the Web, and AOL, although we're considering subscribing to an outrageously expensive new service if we can sell another 1/2 Rvuichi Sakamoto: My Life.

Mary J Blige; and The Best of The Stylistics (Betcha By Golly, Wow!). Creative inspiration care of a limited but regular dose of gimlets and Winstons. Distribution is done from the Wes's Distribution is done from Mitsubishi. The Paper is a 100% digital, 80% of publication. And frankly we're amazed at many of you actually read the fine print.
